A Cultural Guide for International Students

As a visitor here, you will have noticed that Australia is a multicultural country. Immigration from so many countries and cultures around the world have increased the cultural and language diversity of Australia's population.

Depending on the area in which you are living, you may also notice that there may be a lot of people from one culture living there, perhaps your own culture. Living with people from your own culture makes it easier for you when you are starting your studies in a new country. When you are studying or working, however, you will meet or work with many new people from other cultures. They may sound different in the way they speak, the clothes they wear, the food they eat, even the body language they use.

It is important to remember that your culture is unique and special, but it is only one of many, many cultures that are also unique and special. There may be some things about a person's culture that you do not like or you do not agree with, but a person from that culture may see these things as normal and also see things from your culture as unusual.

The most important thing for you as a visitor to a new country is to keep an open mind. People and their cultures are very different and, because they are different does not mean that they are inferior or less important than your culture. Watch, listen to others, hear about their traditions and customs and KEEP AN OPEN MIND!

It is important that all Australians respect one another regardless of cultural, racial or religious differences. To treat all people living in Australia fairly, we need to understand that our interactions should be accepting of, and responsive to, each other's backgrounds, circumstances, needs and preferences.

As part of its efforts to create a safe and caring environment for its students, Scots English College provides students with relevant and useful information about Australia's cultural diversity, some different cultural experiences that new students will experience and how they can deal with these experiences in an appropriate manner.

Some statistics:

Population of Australia: 23 million

Percentage born overseas: 25%

How many migrants: 6 million migrants from 200 countries

Nationalities represented in Australia: 270

Languages and dialects: over 200

Biggest religion: Christians - 65%;

Non-Christian - 6%

There are a number of simple 'rules' that Australian people try to use to live their lives and to be happy. Perhaps the most important one is what Australians call, 'A Fair Go'. 'A Fair Go' means that every person has a good chance to be successful at trying something and that everyone is treated the same and in a fair way. It does not matter if you are male or female, rich or poor young or old or where you come from; everyone is equal.

The Australian Government believes in a multi-cultural Australia. The Government has four principles or simple rules that it wants every Australian to follow to help make Australia a harmonious multicultural society. These are;

1. Responsibility of all – everybody has a duty to help Australia to become a successful multicultural society.
2. Respect for each person – all Australians have the right to express their own culture and beliefs and also should respect the right of others to do the same.
3. Fairness for each person – all Australians should be treated fairly and in the same way.
4. Benefits for all – all Australians gain a lot from the cultural, social and economic benefits that we get from the cultural diversity of our population.

Australia is not a perfect country and there are some people that do not believe in this. They may make other people feel unwelcome or say nasty things like, 'Go home'. If this happens to you, remember that most Australian people do not feel this way towards you. Most Australian people welcome you and want you to have 'a Fair Go' when you are here in Australia or if you plan to stay in Australia in the future.

When we move into a new apartment or neighbourhood or we move to a new country like Australia, there are things we need to do to 'fit in'. It is not about changing your culture or your life style, it is about changing little things that will make it easier for you to live with other people. We can only change the world around us very little, so it is usually easier for us to change a little. If you are used to hot weather in your home country, and it is cold during the winter in Australia, you cannot change the weather. So you may change the way that you dress so that you can keep warm.

If it is common for people in your home country to eat goat meat, but it is not easily available or is quite expensive here in Australia, you may need to change the meat that you eat. If you smoke, you may be able to do so in a café, restaurant or bar in your native country, but it is illegal to do so in Australia. These are just three simple examples of how we may have to change in small ways when we live in a different country and become part of a different culture.

Many Australian customs are based on English, European and North American social behaviours and attitudes. If you understand some of the common customs, you will adapt better and feel more at home.

Some Simple tips

Because there are people from so many cultures living in Australia, there is no such thing as a 'typical Australian'. a During your time studying and living here, you will notice many different social customs , attitudes and a general openness to talk about most things. These things may be very different form your own culture.

Should I be formal or informal ?

You will be studying with people who are around the same age as you. Australians greet people the same age or younger by their first names. Indeed, many Australians have nicknames or short versions of their real name and it is more common to use these especially if people are friends; 'Joseph' is called 'Joe', 'Catherine' is 'Cath' and 'Robert' is 'Bob'!

If the person you are speaking to is older than you, it is polite to call them 'Mr', 'Mrs' or 'Miss' until you get to know them. It is then common to call them by their first names when you know them.

Your teachers will insist that you call them by their first name and this may be very unusual for you because teachers have high status in many cultures. Younger students still call their teachers 'Sir' or 'Miss' when going to primary or high school, however, adult students have a much more informal relationship with their teachers.

How do I greet people?

You will quickly see that Australia is usually a relaxed informal society. You will hear people greet each other by saying 'Hello,' 'Hi' or 'Hey, how's it going?', 'G'day' or 'G'day Mate'. 'G'day Mate' is short for 'Good Day, Mate', and it is a very common greeting in Australia.

In more formal situations it is usual to shake hands with those you meet, especially for the first time or if you haven't seen them for a while. A formal greeting would be, 'Good morning', 'Good afternoon' or 'Good evening'. Using physical contact like shaking hands may not be acceptable in your culture. If this is true, it is important for you to tell the other person so that they can learn about and understand your culture.

It is also common for people, especially males and females, to kiss each other on the cheek once or twice when they meet. They may also hug or embrace if they have not seen each other for a long time. Some cultures may find this form of physical contact offensive. If this is the case for you, it is important that you let others know about your culture.

Saying Goodbye

People generally , 'See ya later,' 'See you around', 'See ya', 'Catch ya later'. In a more formal setting or when you have met someone for the first time, you would say: 'It was a pleasure to meet you,' or 'It was nice to meet you.'

Please and thank you

When you want something, it is polite to say 'please'. It is also very important to say 'thank you' or just 'thanks'. It is really important for that you always say 'please' and 'thank you'.

Australian Slang

When Australians speak to each other, they use a lot of made-up words. Australians also make many of their words shorter. These made up words and short words are called Australian slang. Your own language also has some slang language.

Here are some common Australian slang words and phrases that you will hear:

Arvo = Afternoon, e.g. 'He's coming this arvo'.

Ambo = ambulance e.g. 'The ambo was here in 3 minutes after I called 000'.

Barbie = barbeque, e.g. 'Let's have a barbie this evening'.

Beaut/ Beauty = great/ fantastic e.g. 'Your new car is a beaut!'

Bathers = swim suit e.g. 'I bought new bathers for my holiday'.

Bingle = car accident e.g. 'The traffic was very slow because there was a bingle on the motorway'.

Bloke = man e.g. 'He's a handsome bloke.'

Bottle shop/ Bottle-o = shop where you buy alcohol.

Brickie - = bricklayer - someone whose job is to build with bricks.

The Bush = rough country side outside the city e.g. 'I would not like to live in the bush'.

Chook = chicken e.g. 'We had a roast chook for dinner'.

Crook = feeling sick e.g. 'I feel a little crook today'.

Digger = a soldier e.g. 'An Australian digger were killed in Afghanistan'

Dunny = toilet e.g. 'Where's the dunny?'.

Fair Dinkum = if something is Fair Dinkum, then it is real, true or honest.

e.g. 'He's a fair dinkum Australian'

A fair go = a good chance e.g. 'Every Australian should get a fair go'

Footy = sports game called rugby

Good Onya/ Good Onya Mate = Well Done

Grog = alcohol e.g. 'I gave up the grog for New Year'.

Hotel = pub

Kiwi = someone who is from New Zealand

Mozzie = mosquito e.g. 'The mozzies are out this evening'

On special = something selling at a low price e.g. 'Wine is on special this week at the bottle shop'.

Outback = the remote parts of Australia e.g. 'Uluru is in the Outback'.

Postie = postman e.g. 'The postie was late today'.

Sheila = woman e.g. 'She's a pretty sheila'

Servo = petrol station e.g. 'I met Joe when I was filling up at the servo'.

Sickie/ to pull a sickie = to take a day off work because you are sick

Sparkie = electrician—some who works with electricity/ wires

Sunnies = sun glasses e.g. 'I can't find my sunnies. Did anyone see them?'.

Snag = sausage e.g. 'Put another snag on the barbie'.

Eye Contact

When speaking to another person, it is usual to use eye contact with the other person. In some cultures, eye-to-eye contact may be disrespectful. Australians, however, will make direct eye contact with others they are speaking to but it is seen as a sign of interest in the other person and what they are saying. This is true regardless of the age of people who are engaged in the conversation. This is also the case in other English speaking countries. If this is not part of your culture, you may find it difficult in the beginning, especially with people who you see as being in positions of authority like your teachers. Using eye contact will get easier for you the more you use it.

Personal space

Personal space means the space around your body that you think is 'yours'. If someone moves into that space, you may feel uncomfortable. The amount of personal space a person needs varies from culture to culture. AS an example, people of the same sex in the Middle East stand much closer together than Europeans or North Americans while people of opposite gender stand much further apart. Japanese man will stand perhaps 1 - 2 metres apart when having a conversation while this would be unusual for Europeans.

Australians like their personal space. When talking to someone an 'arms length' is a good measure of the distance between people so that the other person does not feel uncomfortable.

Physical contact

Physical contact means touching another person. Once again, different cultures have different attitudes to physical contact. For example, the attitude to physical contact, especially amongst the opposite sexes in Asian cultures, is usually very conservative yet some European cultures are much more 'physical'.

Harassment : It is easy for others to misunderstand physical contact from you, especially between opposite genders. You need to be aware of laws that exist in Australia that protect people from harassment. Harassment is any form of behaviour that a person does not want or offends or upsets them. Sexual harassment is unwanted sexual advances or requests of a sexual nature. Unwelcome physical contact can be viewed as sexual harassment. Some forms of physical touch may be acceptable in your culture, however, they may be unacceptable in Australia. The simple rule to follow is; do not touch another person unless you know them well enough to know that your physical contact will be welcome.

EQUALITY - VERY IMPORTANT

The laws of Australia says that everyone is equal. It does not matter if you are male or female, young or old, rich or poor, your race, religion or the language you speak. There are clear examples in other cultures that appear to treat people differently because of, for example, their gender. Their may be historical or religious reasons for this make such practices acceptable in other cultures. This is not acceptable in Australia. Australians strongly believe that everyone should have 'a Fair Go' and they can become angry if they see others being treated unfairly because of their gender, race or religion.

Dress

Australians love to dress informally. It is to do with the warm climate and the 'laid-back' nature of Australian culture. T-shirts, shorts and thongs are typical clothes for a warm day. Primary and high school children, however, all wear school uniforms. Adult students do not have to wear a uniform and dress casually. Work places usually require their employees to dress in a certain way; maybe a uniform or business wear. If your culture requires you to dress in a certain way, for example to wear a head scarf or a hijab, it is fully acceptable in a workplace or when studying. The only time when dress may be a problem is in a situation where it may cause a danger to your health and safety or the health and safety of other people around you.

Social Invitations

If you receive an invitation to an event, it is usual and polite to 'Repondez Sil Vous Plait' (RSVP). These are the French words for, 'please reply', i.e. you should let the person who invited you know if you will come or not.

If invited to a friend's house for a meal, it is polite to ask if you should bring something. Your friend may ask you to bring some food or to 'bring a plate', for example, a desert, some meat or may ask you to 'BYO'. 'BYO' means 'Bring Your Own' and it usually means alcohol because alcohol is more expensive than food.

Visiting other people's homes for food or a barbecue is very popular in Australia. Because the climate is mild, people can eat out doors most of the year and it is, of course, cheaper to eat at home than to go to a restaurant. Going to a barbecue is a very good way to meet people and to see how Australian people socialise and enjoy themselves.

How do I respond to a dinner invitation where pork or alcohol would be served?

If your culture or religion does not allow you to consume pork products or alcohol, you need to be honest with your host. Many people are aware of the different dietary requirements for religious or health reasons, such as vegetarianism and halal meats.

Should I be on-time?

We have already said that Australia is a laid-back and relaxed country. If you are going to a barbecue with many other people, being on time is not very important although if you arrive later, you may miss the food! If you are the only guest at someone's home and you are late, it is polite to call to say that you will be late. At work and in business, people are expected to be punctual. Again, you should call if you are going to be late and apologise when you arrive if you are late.

Personal hygiene

We all have to live, work, socialise, study and travel with others. Australia has a mild climate. Summers can be very hot and humid. Personal hygiene is therefore very important. In Australia, standards of personal hygiene are high and people shower every day and change clothes regularly. Australians tend to find it offensive when they can smell other people's body odour. Poor personal hygiene makes it difficult for you to fit in to a new environment and to make new friends.

Out and About? Some more tips

Waiting for a bus or taxi?

We all have to wait; we wait for the bus, we wait in the bank, we wait for the train, we wait in the supermarket. If you are waiting for a taxi, train or bus, you should wait your turn. It does not matter who you are. Do not push to get in front of other people who were there before you. Australians can get very annoyed with other people who do not wait their turn.

Helping others

There are seats on buses and trains for old or disabled people. If you are using one of these seats, you should give it to an old or disabled person if they get on the bus or train. It is also polite to offer your seat to someone older than you or someone who clearly needs to sit down, for example, a pregnant woman.

Smoking

More and more Australians are giving up smoking. As the years pass, smoking is becoming less and less socially acceptable and there are fewer and fewer places where people can smoke outside their own homes. It is illegal to smoke in government buildings, on public transport, all domestic and international flights, theatres, shopping centres, pubs, and restaurants, and in indoor and outdoor public meeting places. Always ask permission to smoke. Never smoke inside someone else's home unless you are given permission to do so.

Litter

If you throw litter on the street, you may be fined. It is illegal to do so in Australia. Local government provide facilities for all residents to get rid of rubbish and litter and to recycle, glass, paper and metals.

Spitting

It is against the law to spit in a public place. Australians also find it very offensive.

Table manners

Australians use cutlery (knife, fork, spoon) when having a meal either in a restaurant or at home. Of course, people may choose to use chop sticks. Asian food is very popular in Australia. If you are at a barbecue or picnic where it is usually informal, people may eat with their fingers, however, they will take the food they want from a larger plate with a spoon or tongs and put it on their own plate before using their fingers. If you are a guest in someone's home for dinner, it is polite to offer to help clean up after the meal.

Australians eat three meals a day; Breakfast (6-8 am); Lunch (12 - 2 pm); Dinner (6-7 pm). People may also have Supper late in the evening and before bed. Supper is a light snack. If you are invited to lunch or dinner, your host will give you a time. It is important to be on-time.

Service description: The Sydney Buddhist Centre in Newtown offers courses in Buddhism and Meditation in a friendly, supportive environment. Our teachers are practising Buddhists who strive to incorporate the ideals and practice of Buddhism into daily life. Our meditation techniques can be used by anyone regardless of religious beliefs.

The Newtown centre is part of a worldwide movement - the Triratna Buddhist Community (formerly the Friends of the Western Buddhist Order or FWBO) which was founded in 1967 by the Venerable Sangharakshita. The Triratna Buddhist Community draws upon the entire Buddhist tradition and expresses itself in a fresh and dynamic way. The Sydney Buddhist Centre has run activities in various locations since 1981. Join us for classes and retreats and meet people with similar interests.
